

"Something True"

We climbed above the heavens and flew across the deep.
We stopped beyond the edge of time-
a place where no one sleeps.
From a tower bright and tall
built of painted glass, we stood above the silver streets where yellow chariots passed.

Outside our sanctuary,
the chaos dragon's roar
brought to mind a lullaby we'd heard somewhere before.
I spoke your name and took your hand;
you calmly met my gaze.
We let the real world slip away
into a dreamer's haze.

*Once upon a time, so very far away,
lines were ever blurred
between the night and day.
In a magic hideaway-
We found a common dream-children chasing fairytales
where things aren't what they seem.*

We swam upstream through strangers-
on an asphalt sea.
And though the paint was peeling,
we moved on aimlessly.
Outside the house of gold and greed, the ghost of fate drew near
and left us cold and broken street side with our fears.

Reality came crashing through the walls of make-believe and flashed it's careless fangs like swords drawn from their sheaths.
It hunted down our innocence and readied for the kill.
The wounds it left are painful
but we can help each other heal.

*Once upon a time, in a land far, far away,
where lines are ever blurred
between the night and day.
We found a magic hideaway-
in our common dream-
two children chasing fairytales
where things aren't what they seem.*

In that distant kingdom'
of artificial light and steel, we drowned ourselves in make-believe while finding something real.
And we faced a threat
as all heroes do
and washed away the fantasy-creating something true.

-Lyrics by Jason Spraggins, 8/2007